DAMASCUS (Agencies) - The head of an Arab League committee trying to end Lebanon's political crisis arrived in Damascus Friday to brief Syrian leaders on their efforts, officials said. They said Sheikh Sabah Al Ahmad Al Sabah, Kuwait's foreign minister, would have talks with Foreign Minister Farouq Al Sharaa on the committee's meeting in Tunis this week with the leaders of Lebanon's two governments. The six foreign ministers held talks with acting Prime Minister Selim Hoss and General Michel Aoun, who heads a rival administration. After three days of talks. Sheikh Sabah said the leaders remained at odds but his committee would continue contacts with other parties in Lebanon.

Jordan explains stand on Jerusalem

MELBOURNE (Petra) — His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan said Thursday that Jordan has always been keen on maintaining its strong ties with the occupied Holy City of Jerusalem despite the Kingdom's decision last July to sever legal and administrative relations with the occupied West Bank. In an address read out on his behalf by Kamel Al Sharif, former minister of awqaf and Islamic affairs, to the fifth International Conference on Religion and Peace, Prince Hassan said that Jordan had succeeded throughout the last 20 years to create the appropriate circumstances for religious coexistence based on brotherhood, leniency and good neighbourhood despite the constraints and problems posed by the exigencies of war.

The Crown Prince said that Jordan had risen above political situations and unsustainable circumstances and continued to direct the necessary attention and care to the Christian and Muslim holy places in Jeru-

Prince Hassan voiced appreciation for the noble motives expressed by ulamas and clergymen to hold such conferences as the one in Melbourne aimed at enhancing mutual understanding between followers of the monotheistic faiths and finding a stronger current advocating peace based on right and justice.

The Crown Prince also said that religious follow an approach for peace that might be different from that traditionresponsible positions.

The fact that this region is the cradle of the three monotheistic religions should serve as a motive for believers in these three religious to resort to reconciliation and peace rather than wars, he said.

Prince Hassan recalled the various wars which erupted throughout the ages around the walls of Jerusalem and said that the political power currently dominating the scene there ignores opportunities for peace, refuses to listen to the voice of mind, and prepares for new

Peking formally invites Gorbachev

PEKING (AP) - China Friday formally invited Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev to come to Peking for their nations' first summit in 30 years, and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze accepted.

The meeting between Gorbachev and senior Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping is expected to formally normalise relations that turned hostile in 1960 when their predecessors quarrelled over the border and leadership of the world communist movement. "The coming Chinese-Soviet summit will be an event of great significance," the official Xinhua news agency quoted Premier Li Peng as telling Shevardnadze in a meeting Friday. He said the normalisation of ties will "help promote world peace and sta-

the year. Shevardnadze, who arrived in Peking Wednesday on the first such visit by a Soviet foreign minister in 30 years, flew Friday night to Shanghai and planned to meet Deng there Saturday.

Duhin said he had heard Deng was in Shanghai for medical examinations, but later qualified that he had heard only rumours, nothing special.

"Certainly we don't have official information about the health of Chinese leaders," he said. Rumours that the 84-year-old Deng is in poor health have been circulating around Peking this winter as every year, but there has been nothing to confirm'

Only token Soviet force left in Kabul

KABUL (R) - A major Soviet military convoy pulled out of Kabul in a snowstorm during the night, leaving only a rearguard in the besieged Afghan capital.

Afghan soldiers questioned by reporters Friday said the column of tanks, armoured personnel carriers and trucks full of soldiers took three hours to file up the road to the Salang Pass.

Soviet sources confirmed that a big convoy had left and said only 1,000-1,500 men were left, mainly guarding the city's airport.

They would be pulled out over Feb. 15 deadline for Soviet troops to leave Afghanistan laid down in last April's Geneva agreement. Neither the Afghan soldiers

The prime ministers of the four states would lay the foundations for the ACC group during a meeting in Amman in February, before its creation is formally declared during a planned minisummit, Reuters quoted the officials and diplomats as saying.

The bloc will be geared towards economic cooperation and membership will be open for any Arab country that does not belong to the six-member Gulf Cooperation Council (GCC) or the planned Maghreb Union between Mauritania, Tunisia,

Libya, Algeria and Morocco. Prime Minister Zaid Rifai said in Cairo last week that work was under way to form the regional group, and that the issue came under discussion at the Joint

A group of Jordanian and Egyptian businessmen has just completed talks in the Egyptian town of Luxor by announcing plans to boost efforts for the formation of the new bloc.

A statement at the end of the meeting said the two sides decided to set up a group to prepare a working paper containing proposals that would attain the greatest possible benefits from the projected group. The two sides emphasised the need to promote Jordanian-Egyptian economic cooperation and open the way for other Arab states to join in. The two sides agreed to prepare a list of industrial and agricultural products from Egypt and Jordan to be allowed to be marketed in either country with no customs duties or other barriers.

The two sides set up committees for investment and trade.

The investment and trade committee will issue import licences to merchants from either country, while the transport committee will make a study on reducing tariffs and rates on transport and transit operations and facilitate the ferry-boat transportation and travel between Aqaba and Nweibeh, according to the statement.

It said that the contracting committee would set up a joint construction unit to help the two countries deal with competition in construction works with other countries, and to pave the way for contracting operations in Iraq and North Yemen. The committee will pursue talks in this matter with North Yemeni and Iraqi businessmen during this month's meeting of Arab contractors in Baghdad, according to the statement. protesters took away Israeli tax rms from merchants and burned them in the street. The United National Leadership of the Uprising has issued leaflets calling on Palestinians to boycott Israeli goods and refuse to pay taxes to the occupation authorities in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Israeli sources say the revenue of the West Bank "civil administration" was halved last year because of the Palestinian uprising which began in December 1987. In the Gaza Strip, Israeli troops shot and wounded a 13year-old boy in the Sha'ti refugee camp Friday, Palestinians said. Palestinians hurled a burning object, believed to be a firebomb, at an Israeli bus carrying workers near Jerusalem, Palestinians reported. No one was injured.

Palestinian minors appearing before military courts in the occupied West Bank are routinely held without bail until the start of their trial, but before the beginning of the Palestinian uprising in December 1987, the practice was rare, Lecker said.

Nine left-wing Israeli legisla-tors wrote a letter to Justice Minister Dan Meridor asking that the practice of holding minors be stopped.

Dedi Zucker, a legislator from the Citizens Rights Movement, said the practice began a year ago after the supreme court ruled that monors - those between the ages of 14 and 18 - can be held without bail until the start of trial if they are charged with throwing

Since then, several dozen Palestinian minors have been held for several weeks under such conditions.

The average sentence for stone-throwing is two months, Lecker said, adding that "some of these kids... end up spending half the sentence in jail, even if they are innocent.

Israeli Trade and Industry Minister Ariel Sharon said Thursday that West Bank troops withdrawn from some areas under a proposed peace plan could be sent back there at any time.

He told a news conference in Brussels that the plan Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir announced Wednesday was ex-actly what was offered 10 years ago in the Camp David accords.

"There will be a withdrawal of troops, a redeployment to special locations. But I want to emphasise: Israel said then and now that those troops being redeployed will retain their freedom of movement everywhere in the area,' Sharon said.

Israel radio reporter Haim Hecht said Kartsen had been denouncing the Israeli-backed South Lebanese Army's (SLA) expulsions of residents from villages in Israel's self-declared "security zone." Military sources estimated the SLA has expelled some 70 residents of Shabaa village at the foot of Mount Hermon in the last two months on suspicion of resistance activities. Four others were expelled from the eastern sector of the "security zone" this week, Israeli sources said. Karlsen made the remarks during a meeting between about 20 Israeli and UNIFIL commanders in South Lebanon Thursday, Hecht said.

Velayati to attend U.N. talks on truce observers

NICOSIA (R) — Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati will attend a meeting of the U.N. Security Council next week on extending the mandate of the U.N. force monitoring the Gulf ceasefire, according to the Iranian news agency IRNA. The agency said the idea of his trip was suggested by Jan Eliasson, the U.N. mediator who visited Tehran and Baghdad last week in an effort to get the stalled Iran-Iraq peace talks moving.

A U.N. spokesman said Tuesday that Iraqi Foreign Minister Tareq Aziz might also visit New York for the council session on Feb. 8 but did not say if he and Velayati would resume face-to-face talks, adjourned since Nov. 11.

Tehran Radio said Thursday Velayati would discuss the peace talks with U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar while in New York.

Tehran insists that Iraqi forces must withdraw from 1,000 square kilometres of Iranian territory which it says they occupy. Baghdad says the disputed Shatt Al Arab border waterway must be dredged of war debris first.

General Slavko Jovic, commander of the U.N. Iran-Irao Military Observer Group (UNIIMOG), said in Baghdad Wednesday that the formation of a military working group bringing together officers from Iran and Iraq was under study.

Iraq said Sunday during Eliasson's visit to Baghdad that it was ready to join such a group. Velayati described this as a positive step and said Iran had accepted the idea when it was first proposed soon after peace talks began Aug. 25.

Israel plays down Mubarak criticism

TEL AVIV (Agencies) - A top aide to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir Friday played down Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak's harsh criticism of Israel over the disputed Taba resort, saying the issue had not created a crisis in relations. Mubarak accused Israel Thursday of jeopardising relations by its "repulsive" equivocation over withdrawing from the beachfront territory it seized in the 1967 war.

Mubarak made the remarks even though the Israeli cabinet Wednesday said it was committed to withdrawal and would return Taba within two to three weeks of settling other outstanding issues with the Egyptians. Yossi Ben Aharon, director general of the prime minister's office, said the cabinet decision showed Israel "wants to send the message to Egypt there is no "We have to tell them ...

'come, let's solve the problem in direct negotiations.' We solved all the problems until now, problems that were a lot more difficult... this is a problem that can be solved," Ben Aharon said on Israel army radio. Industry and Trade Minister

Ariel Sharon, meanwhile, said he believed Israel should consider destroying the luxury Sonesta hotel before returning Taba to Egypt.
"With relations as expressed through the sharp....statements said on Israel Radio.

"It's possible that relations with Israel are still such that it's not a good idea to have extensive Egyptian activity or settlement so near the border," Sharon added.

Compensation for the hotel is among the disagreements holding up Israeli withdrawal. Israel has insisted it would not set a timetable for returning Taba until agreement is reached on compensation for the hotel as well as access to Taba for Israeli tourists.

Two rounds of U.S.-mediated talks on Taba last month ended in deadlock, mainly over the issue of linking withdrawal to compensation and access. Abraham Sofaer, the U.S. State Department legal adviser who has been mediating the talks, went from Israel to Egypt Thursday to meet with Egyptian offi-Mubarak warned Thursday the Israeli attitude is cracking bilateral relations, causing loss of Egyp-

Shevardnadze due in Pakistan today for crucial Afghan talks

ISLAMABAD (Agencies) -Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze makes a 17-hour visit to this capital Saturday in a last flurry of diplomatic activity aimed at averting further bloodshed in Afghanistan once Soviet troops are gone.

His 17-hour visit comes less than two weeks before the Soviet army is scheduled to complete its troop withdrawal from Afghanistan following a nine-year military intervention to back the government against rebels.

Shevardnadze is the highestranking Soviet official to visit Pakistan in more than 20 years. He was scheduled to arrive Saturday at 11 p.m. (1800 GMT) and to depart at 4 p.m. (1100 GMT) Sunday.

Soviet Defence Minister Dmit-'ri Yazov visited Kabul in January.

"We hope our talks with the Soviet leader will pave the way for a peaceful settlement, although the situation on the ground in Afghanistan is depressing," a Pakistani government spokesman said recently.

He was referring to reports of continued fighting between communist forces and the rebels, especially along the main Soviet withdrawal route from Kabul north to the Soviet border.

U.S. court approves extradition

NEW YORK (AP) - A federal judge has ruled that a naturalised U.S. citizen accused of taking part in an attack on a bus in the Israeli-occupied West Bank in 1986 could be extradited to Israel. U.S. District Judge Edward Korman Thursday stayed his order for 30 days to allow the lawyers of Mahmoud Al Abed Ahmad to file a petition for a writ of habeus corpus. Korman's ruling was the result of a second extradition proceeding initiated by the U.S. government against Ahmad, who is wanted in Israel for allegedly participating in the attack on the bus on April 12, 1986, in which the driver was killed and three passengers were seriously wounded. A federal magistrate, John Caden, had concluded last June 16 that Ahmad could not be extradited because his acts were a "political offence" and thus fell outside the purview of the extradition treaty between the United States and Israel.

Khomeini pardons broadcasters

NICOSIA (AP) - Iran's Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini pardoned four radio executives a day after they were sentenced at his orders for broadcasting a programme which allegedly insulted Islam, the official Islamic Republic News Agency (IRNA) reported Thursday. IRNA quoted the daily newspaper Jomhuri Islami as saying Khomemi agreed to pardon the broadcasters Wednesday after receiving an appeal on their behalf from Chief Justice Abdul Karim Musavi Ardebili. The broadcasters were arrested at the weekend and sentenced Tuesday for airing a phone-in programme in which a caller said the leading character of a Japanese soap opera, "Oshin," was a better role model for Islamic women than the daughter of the Prophet Mohammed.

There are no French nationals still held by pro-Iranian groups in Lebanon. A copy of Naccache's appeal, sent to Mitterrand Jan. 8, was given to the Paris daily Liberation by his lawyer a few days before French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas is due to visit Tehran to seal a diplomatic rapprochement.

NICOSIA (R) - Iranian narcotic agents backed by army helicopters wiped out a heavily-armed drugs convoy, killing all 70 traffickers, in a three-day desert battle, Tehran Radio said Thursday. It said the convoy, defended by light and medium calibre weapons, anti-aircraft guns and mortars, was tracked down and destroyed in the southeastern Lut desert. An officer quoted by the radio said army helicopters set fire to five vehicles in the convoy, one of which contained three tonnes of drugs.

Bahrain endorses Islamic court plan

BAHRAIN (AP) - Bahrain Thursday endorsed a plan to set up an international Islamic court of justice patterned on the World Court at the Hague, the Gulf News Agency reported. A decree issued by the emir, Sheikh Isa Ibn Salman Al Khalifa, approved a decision taken at the last pan-Islamic summit to found the court out of desire to have a juridical body that settles disputes in line with Islamic Shari'a," the agency said. Shari'a (legislation) forms the basis for court systems in most of the Islamic countries grouped in the 46-state Organisation of Islamic Conference

Maghreb set for union

By Jonathan Clayton Reuter

RABAT — Five heads of state will meet in Marrakesh this month to look at ways of forging a North African union bringing together some 62 million people from Morocco's Atlantic coast to Libya's eastern border.

The latest of the world's trade blocs — to be known as the Arab Maghreb Union — would link Algeria, Morocco, Tunisia, Libya and Mauritania in a form of common market.

It aims to strengthen the region's hand in international trade talks by welding very different economies into an entity equipped to meet the challenges of the Supporters say the countries' economies complement each other and the alliance will enable them to capitalise on extensive natural resources. Libya and Algeria are overflowing with oil and natural gas, but are short of consumer goods and have neglected agriculture. Morocco has a virtual monopoly in phosphates and produces tonnes of fresh fruit and vegetables. Mauritania has iron ore and other minerals and rich fishing grounds. Tunisia has a well-deand an efficient banking sector.

The way to unity was opened when the five countries held a landmark first summit just outside Algiers last June, after a decade of rivalry between Algeria and Morocco and between Libya and Tunisia.

They agreed to work for greater economic and political cooperation and set up committees to draw up firm proposals covering education, customs, security and other matters.

Announcing the second summit from Feb. 15-17, the Moroccan Foreign Ministry said it arose from the determination of all countries to work for greater unity and followed the positive re-sults of the lower-level commit-

Ministers from all five countries met in Tunis in January and agreed in principle to set up the union. But diplomats said they remained far apart on what form it should take. Algeria and Morocco were re-veloped manufacturing industry argue that after years of building trade links across the Mediterranean, it is necessary first to create the basics for more ambitious unity schemes with trans-continental economic projects. Analysts stress the difficulties attached to bringing inefficient state-run socialist economies, such as those in Libya and Algeria, into closer harmony with their capitalist neighbours Morocco and Tunisia. The countries currently trade little with each other but all have close commercial links with Western Europe.

The summit will take place only a week after Algerian President Chadli Benjedid ends a state visit to Morocco, the first Algerian leader to cross the border for over 20 years.

The two countries brought the age-old ideal of Maghreb unity back to life when they restored diplomatic ties last May. Rela-tions were broken for 13 years over Algeria's support for Polisario guerrillas fighting Morocco in the Western Sahara.

Political analysts and diplomats say the desert war is now as good as over. They expect Benjedid's visit and the summit to set the seal on a regional accord.

leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini returned in triumph to Tehran Feb. 1, 1979, the future of the revolution is as cloudy as its past.

Analysts of the revolution from around the world agree that the ceasefire last Aug. 20 in the war with Iraq will force Iran's leaders to decide on their future, a decision held in abeyance during the eight years of hostilities.

Most are convinced this will be difficult. Iran's leaders are divided amongst themselves over their revolution's future and Khomeini as supreme leader has so far declined to favour any group with his obvious approval.

İmpassioned government calls to defend the revolution and the fatherland which concentrated the minds of the mass of the Iranian people on winning the war, have eased.
The knife of political extremism was kept sharp by the war and the honing blade was anniversary.

No one is sure how the Iranians will react now that concerns about food, clothes and housing are uppermost in their

"Now (the leaders) have to be active not reactive to affairs in order to tackle reconstruction, but they cannot because they are divided," said Bager Mo'in, a biographer of Khomeini.

"The challenges debated to day have been there all along but because of the war have been delayed," Mahmoud Sariolghalam, a professor at Tehran's Shahid Beheshti University, said.

Dariush Homayun, a cabinet minister under the late Shah of Iran, wrote in a recent article: 'Although opposed to the regime, many Iranians stood by it because of the war." Khomeini rode a wave of popular opposition to the Shah and channelled it toward his vision of a blueptint for the whole Islamic World. As supreme leader his word has been law. But in peace he has softened his position and allowed a political debate, the end of which is not yet in sight. the analysts said.

loyalty to the state was beyond doubt. This has helped strengthen pragmatist Rafsanjani's hand by undermining the view that traditional Islam holds all the answers for the modern world, said Khalid Ibn Sayeed, a professor at Queen's College Canada. Last October Rafsanjani said the ideal of a united Islam was far distant. "The Muslims need high-mindedness, and this high-mindedness does not exist," he said. However, no analyst quoted seriously believes that the immediate future of Iran would be other than an Islamic one.

One Iranian military expert speculated that the army or the large, well-armed Revolutionary guards could intervene in the event of serious divisions between the clerics when Khomeini died, but only in support of one Islamic group or another.

Some analysts believe the next act of the revolution may be to redefine the role of the clergy, allowing them more room to fit Islam to practical matters and guide Iran through present difficulties.

UNRWA chief expresses concern over Israeli disruption of services

By Rania Atalla Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA) chief Thursday expressed grave concern over the Israeli occupation authorities' interference with and "disruption" of the agency's activities in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, most notably the agency's health assistance programmes.

"Our clinics are interfered with, our ambulances are stopped, our freedom of circulation is not assured... some of our staff are arrested or beaten up and some of the wounded have been taken away from our ambulances... We are very worried about that," UNRWA's Commissioner-General Giorgio Giacomelli told a press conference marking the end of a five day visit to Jordan.

Giacomelli said the stepped up presence of Israeli occupation authorities and their interference in the agency's activities had resulted in increased "friction" in the territories.

"What concerns us most is the (occupation authorities') disruption of our health assistance to Palestinians," he said adding that the agency had formed an emergency medical assistance programme to deal with the high number of casualties in the occu-

"What we keep calling an emergency has become a new kind of normality... We will have to rely on more generous contributions as unusual activities become usual," Giacomelli noted.

waiting" for the refugees.
In Giacomelli's view. Jordan's decision to sever legal and administrative links with the West Bank brought "a measure of clarity" to the relationship between Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO), removing all "ambiguities."

The commissioner-general said his visit to the Kingdom was aimed at finding out whether and how the agency's activities would be affected following the intifada and Jordan's decision to sever legal and administrative links with the West Bank.

He pointed out that he had received assurances from Jordanian officials that Jordan's commitment to supporting the Palestinian cause had not changed. During his stay in Jordan, Giacomelli met with His Majesty King Hussein, His Royal Highness Crown Prince Hassan and Prime Minister Zaid Rifai. Giacomelli foresaw 'trouble' regarding services in the occupied territories. "We will have to see what kind of vacuum, besides the political and psychological one, will emerge... What will happen to schools, hospitals and services.... There will be increased pressure on us," he said.

UNRWA is to spend, over the three coming years, $65 million on its activities in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, its relief work in Lebanon, as well as the agency's regular activities. "We have not yet met our target (of gathering $65 million)," Giacomelli said, but added that the attitude of member states and donour countries has been "generous." In 1987, UNRWA had an estimated budget of $200.3 million, only four per cent of which came from the U.N. The agency, which started work in 1950, provides education, health and relief services to some 2.1 million registered refugees.

Bridgeable differences

WHILE the Arab League ministerial committee charged with the mission of reconciling differences in Lebanon has ended the first stage of its mandate with no breakthrough, it would be incorrect to characterise its work thus far as a total failure. It is noteworthy and encouraging to observe that after many days and nights of continuous negotiations in Tunis last week between the Arab League committee and the representatives of two principal parties in the Lebanese conflict, namely, Prime Ministers Salim Al Hoss and General Michael Aonn, considerable movement and agreement were recorded on the issue of the urgent need for a "Lebanese perestroika," as a prelude to an overall Lebanese solution. This is by far the most basic dimension inthe overall Lebanese crisis which has paralysed the country for over a decade and a half. It is also encouraging to note that the two principal sides in Lebanon concede that internal reforms, whether constitutional or otherwise, are the heart of the matter and supercede all other issues. This is not to belittle the issue of Israeli occupation of southern Lebanon on which there is also a firm agreement that it should end forthwith. Unfortunately, however, Israeli withdrawal from southern Lebanon is not dependent solely on a Lebanese agreement because Israeli occupation of the southern region of Lebanon is an enforced regime on all the Lebanese by Israel's military might and may not be brought to an end by the Lebanese alone.

The only other point that still separates the two basic antagonists in Lebanon is apparently related to the Syrian role in that country. If this is the case, then the differences are indeed bridgeable. Syria, intervened in Lebanon many years ago in the first place, to prevent chaos and civil strife on its western flank. Syria has, on more than one occasion, expressed the opinion that law and order in that country cannot be attained without affecting real and genuine reforms within Lebanon. It would only be possible to reconcile the artificial differences of the Syrian dimension as soon as the much sought reforms in Lebanon are realised. After all, Syrian involvement in Lebanon came about as a result of an Arab League decision and specifically to carry out a certain mandate. As soon as the Lebanese house is put in order again and the sought after reforms are affected there will be very little to differ about regarding the Syrian mission in Lebanon. With more goodwill on the part of all the Lebanese factions it is more than possible to crown the Arab League ministerial committee's mandate with total success in the days ahead. In any case this committee must never abandon hope for the sake of the Lebanese people.

Al Ra'i daily Friday warns against Israeli threats on Iraq, which if carried out would trigger a new Arab-Israeli war. The paper said that the Israelis would launch an aggression on Iraq under the pretext that this Arab country possesses chemical weapons which Israel fears. But the true reason behind any military adventure against any Arab state is the deteriorating internal situation in Israel itself, it adds. Furthermore, the Israelis are facing continued isolation from the world community as a result of their atrocities against the Palestinians; and their leaders are in dispute over the coming international conference on the Middle East, the paper noted. But it said that the Arabs should not take the Israeli threats against Iraq lightly and must be ready to confront the new aggression which Israel hopes would eclipse Iraq's victories in the Guif war and deal a heavy blow to the Arabs who are now rallying their forces and their ranks in a new force to confront external chailenges. The Arabs, the paper concluded, should not allow Israel to escape from its dilemma by launching a new aggression on the Arab land.

A columnist in Al Ra'i daily comments on Israeli-Egyptian disputes over Taba enclave in Sinai which according to an international panel of arbitrators should return to Egypt. Mahmoud Al Rimawi says that following months of stalling and avoiding the implementation of the panel's resolution, on the part of Israel and following unfruitful negotiations between Egyptian and Israeli officials over the issue, President Hosni Mubarak found it inevitable but to come out strongly against the Israeli position and accuse the Jewish state of adopting a repulsive attitude and scoffing at international agreements. Mubarak warned the Israelis against further procrastination which Israel is exercising as a means of blackmail against Cairo which is now taking very clear position in alignment with the other Arab states, the writer says. Political blackmail is not the only kind of pressure Israel is trying to put on Egypt but there is the drug pressure represented in attempts to smuggle drugs and the attempt to bring into Egypt Zionist elements to stir trouble in Egypt, the writer adds. He says trouble and disturbances among Egyptian lawyers were instigated by an Israeli agent and that in a number of instances Jews were arrested trying to cause security problems in Cairo. The writer says that it is clear that Israel is trying by all possible means to avoid giving up Taba and causing trouble for the Egyptian authorities because they are demanding that Arab land be returned according to international law.

Al Dustour daily also tackles Israel's threats of launching an aggression on Iraq as it claims that country possesses chemical and biological weapons. The paper said that the Israelis realise that Iraq today is far stronger than it had been at the time when Israeli jets raided the nuclear plant near Baghdad, and the Iraqi military power is capable of dealing a heavy blow to the Israelis as it did to the Iranians. But we believe that the Israelis are resorting to threats against Iraq in a bid to escape the situation on the domestic front which is indeed in disarray as a result of Israel's continued atrocities against the Palestinians and its policies vis-a-vis the Arab World and the international community at large, the paper added. It said that the Israelis want to divert world attention from the situation in the occupied territories and are finding in the accusation of Iraq possessing chemical means to achieve their evil objectives.

the brink of nuclear war during the Cuban missile crisis of October 1962 than has previously been thought. According to fresh details of the crisis that emerged in Moscow at an unprecedented meeting of some of the participants, nuclear warheads were already on hand in Cuba for the Soviet missiles that were targeted. on Washington, New York and other major American cities.

While Washington had photonuclear-capable Soviet missiles in Cuba, the Americans were never sure whether nuclear warheads to arm them were actually on the island. Soviet officials at the weekend meeting, who included the former foreign minister. Andrei Gromyko, and the former ambassador to the United States, Anatoly Dobrynin, disclosed that warheads had actually reached the island in September 1962 and had already been deployed by the time the United States discovered the existence of the secret missile bases the following month.

Sergei Khrushchev, a son of the former Soviet leader, told foreign journalists Saturday that the missiles could have been operational in less than a few hours, if his father had given the word. But he also said that General Dmitry Volkogonov, the head of the Moscow Military History Archive Institute, had told the conference "that even in the tensest moments, there was no command given to put the rockets in a state of military readiness, and the warheads were never put on the rockets."

Volkogonov himself said that it would have taken four to five hours to make the missiles ready for launching, and an additional

THE WORLD was even closer to 15 minutes to fire them. He also said that, at the time, the Soviet Union had only "about 20" intercontinental ballistic missiles capable of reaching the United States from its own territory.

That was "a shockingly low number", according to one surprised American official, and only a fraction of the total estimated at the time by the CIA. It meant that the 42 intermediaterange Soviet missiles either installed or in transit to Cuba in Octographic proof that there were ber 1962 would have represented more than two-thirds of Moscow's capacity to deliver nuclear strike on American territory.

The younger Khrushchev, an engineer in the Soviet missile programme at the time of the missile crisis, pointed out that "even in the event of an American invasion or air strike, Soviet officers in Cuba had no orders to use the missiles." The missiles were always under full Soviet control, he said, and Cuban officials said they were not even permitted on to the bases.

"This place was 11,000 kilometres from the USSR, and to help in a conventional way was impossible," he said, adding that his father thought that "only an extraordinary measure, such as placing nuclear weapons in Cuba. could defend the island." He said the idea of sending the missiles was first broached in May 1962, and the decision was made in

On October 27, when he learned that an American U-2 reconnaissance plane had been shot down over Cuba, Nikita Khrushchev "was very upset," his son recalled. "He was certain that nuclear war wouldn't start as long as he and the president controlled the situation. But this meant they might lose control."

The Moscow seminar marks the first time that top American, Soviet, and Cuban officials involved in the 1962 crisis have met to discuss it. The picture that emerges from their discussions is one of a vastly more complex confrontation than the version previously known, and one in which even the U.S. participants now say the Kennedy administration played a much more equivocal role than was realised at the

On the U.S. side, the partici-pants included the former defence secretary, Robert McNamara, the former national security adviser, McGeorge Bundy, a Kennedy speech-writer, Theodore Sorensen, and his press secretary, Pierre Salinger. Several U.S. scholars, specialists on the missile crisis, organised the meeting. Scott Armstrong, the director of the National Security Arcthree trunks of declassified U.S. documents with him.

In addition to Gromyko, Dobrynin, and Sergei Khrushchev, the Soviet side included Sergo Mikoyan, a Latin America specialist who was in Cuba at the time of the crisis with his father, Anastas Mikoyan, then the first deputy premier.

the subject, reportedly said that two days before the crisis peaked, Castro sent a message to Khrushchev, urging that the missiles be fired. According to this account, Castro's cable convinced Khrushchev that the confrontation had gone too far, and he decided to agree to U.S. demands that the missiles be withdrawn.

The existence of such a cabled plea from Castro could not be corroborated by Soviet and Cuban participants attending the . meeting, but three delegates confirmed that they had indeed heard a knowledgeable Soviet participant give the account during a session break. They said that the report clearly took the American side by surprise. Luncheon participants said it was unclear from the account whether Castro asked that the missiles be launched pre-emptively or at the xander Alekseev, the Soviet ambassador to Cuba at the time, hives in Washington, brought as saying that Castro, who had previously been calm throughout the crisis, became particularly agitated around October 26. Fearing a U.S. airstrike, he reportedly spent that night in a bomb shelter where he and the Soviet envoy drafted a cable to Khrushchev warning of intelligence information that a U.S. attack would come within days or possibly hours.

In another surprise, the Cuban delegates disclosed that Cuba had urged the Kremlin three times to make a public announcement of its intention to install nuclear missiles in Cuba, President Kennedy, in his public announcement, stressed that the Soviet weapons had been moved secretly on to the island. Former administration officials have said since that the United States would have been hard-pressed to win world support for blocking deployment of the missiles if it had been undertaken openly. Delegates here confirm that during the formal sessions both Cuban and Soviet officials emphasised their conviction that. by October 1962, a U.S. invasion of Cuba was imminent. American officials continue to insist that the United States had no such intention, although Robert McNamara conceded that he had told the seminar, "I could understand why the Cuban and Soviet leaders at that time believed the U.S. was intending to invade Cuba." One of the Cuban participants. Comandante Emilio Aragones. said that Cuban authorities estimated that as many as 800,000 people could have been killed in the event of a U.S. invasion. He said that the 20,000 Soviet troops stationed in Cuba had also been ready to "fight and die" alongside their "Cuban brothers."

The conference appears to have convinced the American participants that Soviet determination to defend Cuba against American assault played a much larger role in Khrushchev's thinking than has been previously acknowledged Although Khrushchev cited the defence of Cuba as his primary motive for installing missiles there, U.S. officials and academics have tended to emphasise other motives.

Before the Moscow meeting, American participants in the 1962 crisis generally considered the Cubans to have been almost extraneous to its development. They tended to see the crisis strictly as a Soviet-American showdown over an issue of strategic advantage. The Moscow conference appears to have signi-. ficantly altered that perception. As Scott Armstrong put it during the closing session of the confer-. ence: "Cuba has been put back into the Cuban missile crisis in a very definite way here." Several Americans said that they had previously underestimated the extent to which the Cubans and the Russians believed that a U.S. invasion of the island was a real possibility. "Much of the trouble arose from a failure of communication" between Washington and Moscow, said McGeorge Bundy. "You failed to understand in the Soviet Union that we were not going to invade the island of Cuba. That : was partly our mistake, too, since we failed to understand your

"There is plenty of blame to be shared by all three countries represented here today," concurred Theodore Sorensen.

Jorge Risquet Valdes proposed that a sequel to this conference be held in Havana. "We feel this would be just, and make a further contribution to our understanding."

Palestinians in Honduras: success breeds resentment

By David Adams

JAMILE, aged 88, rocked back and forward in her arm chair singing sad verses in Arabic about a faraway homeland where she hopes to be buried one day. "It broke my heart to leave," she broke my heart to leave," said, recalling the day 26 years ago when she left her home in the Palestinian village of Beit Jala, a mile from Bethlehem, to start a new life in the Americas. The Palestinian trail from Bethlehem Central and South America — as well as North America - is a well 11 children preceded her. Last month her sister, Rahda, came from Beit Jala, to escape the repression that has claimed the lives of over 350 Palestinians - among them a number of her relatives - in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip since December 1987.

The story of Palestinian emigration to Honduras, why and how they came, and the development of their new communities, is almost totally unchronicled. It is also a parable of the challenges facing any immigrant community seeking assimilation in a foreign land. Following a century of hardships, the Palestinians are today scattered throughout the world. In their own land they are refugees and even the Arab World has failed to truly open its doors to them. By comparison, from San Francisco to Santiago, Palestinian immigration has been an astonishing success story, thousands settling in new lands where they have been integrated quickly and prosperously.

Their story bears the added irony of a people who fled the political and economic misery of the Middle East, and saw in Central America a new land of opportunity and peaceful sanctuary. But in recent years Central America has witnessed its own exodus as thousands have fled war and poverty. It is also ironic that the Palestinian exodus was spurred on by the conviction that the Americas offered the opportunities of a virgin land as yet unexploited. It was at this very time that the earliest Zionists. were promoting the idea of Jewish emigration to Palestine, basing their claim not just on the Bible but also on the belief that Palestine offered a land for a people without a land.

Estimates vary over the size of Honduras' Arab population from 25-100,000, out of a total population of four million. Of these the vast majority came from a handful of Christian villages near Bethlehem. Emigration increased during the Great War, when the Ottomans pressed young Christian men into military service and threw them into the front lines. The young men were smuggled out of Palestine in boats bound for France. On arrival in Marseilles, so the story goes, they boarded boats headed for "America", not realising this often meant South or Central

Reasons for racial tensions

As new immigrants they adapted quickly to the language and began to take over the mer-chant class. "Today they have enormous wealth and influenced by Honduran standards," said one diplomat. "In pure commercial-industrial terms, they dominate the country". One has only to walk down Third Avenue in San Pedro Sula, the country's busiest commercial street, to grasp their and its surrounding villages to economic influence. Every other shop front bears the name of a leading Palestinian family such as trodden path and one on which 10 Larach, Sikaffy, Handal, Fanous one end of the street is the largest textile factory in Honduras, owned by the Canahuati family, from Bethlehem. But their economic success has aroused resentment from the indigenous Indian and traditional Latin communities. The word 'turco", meaning Turk, is often used as an insult in Honduras, relating to the first Palestinian immigrants who arrived with Turkish passports from the Ottoman empire. As owners of some of the largest businesses in the country they are regarded as barsh and exploitative employers. "We offer employment. They accept it but they resent it," said one Palestinian businesswoman.

Other reasons for racial tensions include the self-contained nature of the Arab community. Until recently they tended to marry only their own kind, many of the older generation still speak Arabic amongst themselves and speak Spanish with strong Arab accents and clumsy grammar. At home they still eat Arabic food and drink Arabic coffee and tea. "In modern day folklore they are the Jews of Honduras. Ask any Honduran and they will tell you all Arabs have long noses and rip you off," said one diplomat. The Palestinian community is divided about how to handle its identity. "It's time we stood up and said proudly what we are doing for this country," said Elias Larach, a hardware store owner in the northern city of San Pedro

"We had the confidence in the country to build up businesses and invest money. We are immensely grateful for that opportunity. But it's time our contribution was recognised," he added, noting that Palestinian businessmen are major contributors to social programmes and charities in the country.

'We have worked hard to make this a better country. We have our traditions and love for our motherland. But, we are above all Honduran." said Selim Canahuati, who left Bethlebem aged two in 1951 and now runs a successful marble business and is the treasurer of the Honduran national football team selection

In the past Palestinians have staved out of the traditional Honduran power-elites, the armed forces, the political parties and the banks. Today the first signs of change are looming with the governing Liberal party headed by young politician with Arab blood. Many believe he will be Honduras' next president following elections in 1989. The next Honduran Congress is also likely to have a new influx of Arab politicians. His political opponents have seized on Flores' Palestinian ties in an attempt to discredit his campaign. During the last round of internal party elections one of his leading opponents turned up at party headquarters to cast his vote dressed in Arab costume. In an attempt to limit potential damage to his chances, Flores has dropped the offending Arab half of his name — Facusse — now calling himself Flores F. But were Flores to win the presidency next year some people fear an anti-Arab backlash. Said one Palestinian businessman, "this is not the time for a politician who everyone knows has Arab origins to become president of this country. The whole Arab community will be blamed for any failures in such a govern-

In the military only a small number of officers of Palestinian origin have emerged. Two Arab officers have risen to the rank of colonel, and a handful of others currently hold lesser ranks. The banking community has long been the preserve of a small but active Jewish community who came to Honduras in the 1920s from Russia and Romania. "We have traditionally always had very good relations with the Palestinians," said one Jewish politician. "We tend not to compete as we are bankers and they are merchants. In fact their presence has made it easier for other foreign immigrant communities such as ours to operate here."

Carlos Fores Facusse, a bright The Palestinian identity

> Divisions also exist in the Palestinian community over a sense of identity with the Palestinian political cause. The year-old uprising in the West Bank and Gaza has heightened awareness among some Hondurans of their Palestinian mots. The Palestinian influence in the Honduran media is strong with a number of the leading independent newspapers, radio stations and TV channels owned by Arab businessmen. Newspapers cover news from the occupied times carry advertisements supporting the PLO and the Palestinian uprising. "We are all Honduran first but the Palestinian cause is a just cause and something I can identify with. I don't agree with Arafat but I admire what he's trying to do," said one young Honduran woman whose father emigrated from Palestine. "Its the cause of my father and my grandfather and it's the cause of my children and my grandchildren," said Jose, who carries a Palestinian flag on his key-ring as a keepsake. His brother-in-law is a teacher in Dahaisha refugee camp, on the outskirts of Bethlehem, which has been the scene of many clashes between Palestinians and Israeli soldiers.

Jamile's grand-daughter, Marlyn, was born in Honduras and is one of few of the younger genera-tion who speaks Arabic. "We are of Arab origin but feel 100 per cent Honduran," she said. Before she could utter another word Jamile broke in, "You don't lose your blood. We are Arabs for always." - Middle East International, London.

Pinochet privatisation

SANTIAGO — Opposition leaders are fiercely criticising a drive by General Augusto Pinochet to sell most of Chile's remaining state firms to private investors in his last year in power.

They say he aims to tie the hands of future civilian govern-

Chile has become Latin America's showcase free-market economy since Pinochet overthrew the Marxist government of Salvador Allende and seized power in a 1973 military coup.

Officials say the sell-offs will consolidate a competitive economy free of state intervention and, by spreading ownership vent any future attempt at nationalisation by a leftist government.

But opposition leaders say a retreating Pinochet is applying a "scorched-earth" strategy after his electoral defeat on October 5 to undermine the economic power of a civilian government taking office in March 1990.

"The government is rapidly stripping the state of its assets so that no important company falls into the next government's hands," said economist Gonzalo Martner, who is drafting the opposition economic programme for the December elections.

Chile has sold 31 enterprises since the privatisation plan was launched in 1985. The state industrial development agency Corfo has auctioned off electric utilities, Chile's only steel industry and 50.2 per cent of the national telephone company, which was acquired by Bond Corp of Au-

Corfo now plans to sell 30 more firms including the national air-line Lan Chile, part of the oil industry, Santiago's subway system, the water works, two hyd-

And the military junta is also studying a law to grant the central bank autonomy from the executive branch, which opposition leaders say will make it difficult for the next president to manage the economy.

The coalition of 17 parties that defeated his bid for another eight years in power says Pinochet no longer has a legitimate mandate to continue selling state com-

"It is unacceptable that the government should try to complete the privatisations in such little time by auctioning off national assets at any price after its policies have clearly been rejected by a majority of Chileans," said Patricio Aylwin of the centrist Christian Democratic Party.

Opposition leaders want Pinochet to stop the sell-offs until the actions can be reviewed by congress, which has been closed since the 1973 coup and will reopen in March 1990.

The leaders have pledged to respect private property, saying they do not oppose privatisations in principle, but have warned investors that sales of state companies made after the October elections could be annulled.

Some suspect that Pinochet may try to privatise state-run copper company Codelco, which generates almost half the country's foreign currency.

'German art of the late 1980s'

(INP). — The organisers and adjudicators of the "Deutsche Kunst der späten 80er Jahre" exhibition in Düsseldorf very wisely did not claim to be offering an overview of the entire art scene in the Federal Republic of Germany. They took the wind out the sails of any criticism by stating right right from the start that their selection was based on entirely subjective criteria. All the same, an undertaking with the somewhat anaemic title of "BiNationale" — as this double exhibition of works by young German and young American artists was styled - deserves to be representative in character. This show which took place initially in Düsseldorf and is now starting in Boston - followed by a number of other American cities — will provide persons on the other side of the ocean with a glimpse into the artistic situation in the land where the works come from as the touring exhibition of American works from Boston to Düsseldorf did. The result of a comparison of the two exhibitions was a foregone conclusion right from the start: Art in the Western World is developing roughly on parallel lines.

The avant-garde, an international affair from the outset, has, with increasing age, become a more and more universal phenomenon. The pictures resemble each other. And yet one of the most popular cultural-critical parlour games at an exhibition along the lines of the German-American "BiNationale" is to ask about the national characteristics

Superfluous

The question is superfluous in the case of works by Imi Knoebel, Harald Klingenhöller and Ludger Gerdes. Malevich's black square, arranged by Gerdes symetrically with several other quadrate elements and a chop-pretation of the way the heritage of the founding fathers of abstract art are being treated. Imi Knoebel, who makes no bones about his admiration for Malevich, fits nicely into the traditional line of the classical modern of supranational pattern with his sweeping minimalistic three-part work. Harald Klingenhöller's serial arrangements, in which cubic forms of corrugated board constitute the focal point, can literally be read as paraphrases of Minimal Art. The conceptual art of Georg Herold or Rosemarie Trockel — she is the only woman among the 26 artists as Katharina Fritsch had to cry off at the last moment — are in no way tied to a purely national content. Gerhard Merz and Jörg Immendorf represent the span between two highly different con-cepts of form. At the Düsseldorf exhibition, Gerhard showed a gigantic oil painting bearing the title "Ed io anche son architetto." With a T-square against a red background, the title of the work on the upper edge of the picture, and year and artist's name on the lower edge, Merz is declaring his intention to form, to shape, to establish himself as a creator-artist. The picture has manifesto quality, formulates demands which now seem highly antiquated. It evokes an empty, formal severity, sug-gestive of classical — and fascist architecture. Merz's works extol pure form, are intent on generating a feeling of elevation, not least through their monumental, space-devouring dimensions. Immendorf, one of the "father generation" of the neo-Expressionist move towards new panel painting at the beginning of the 1980s, has largely turned his back on political subjects which were his distinguishing feature. He now offers a

Wild canvas artists

Since the dawn of the 1980s. other countries, particularly Great Britain and the United States, have tried, time and time again, to tie German art down to expressionist style and to brooding Teutonic romanticism. The success of the "wild" canvas artists, who emerged so vehemently at the beginning of the decade, stems to no inconsiderable extent from the "Wiedererkennungs-Effekt" (recognition effect); the formal and subject concepts of expressionism seemed to have been transposed to the present. Here, foreign critics in particular believed they had found the expression of a typically German frame of mind. oomy and torn, inclined to sudden outbursts. The exhibition in Düsseldorf demonstrates even more clearly, towards the close of the decade, something it was even possible to make out during the heyday of the "Neue Wilde" (new wild ones): the extent to which the imitated style of "classical" expressionism grew from what was, in the final analysis, a light-hearted, carefree, playful, and partially cynical impulse. Werner Büttner's series "Da-men aus dem KPX-Bad" (Ladies from the KPX Bath), which have been roughly but nevertheless precisely hewn out of wood, stretching their limbs on tiled pedestals, have, of course, something to do with the fascination aroused by African sculpture in European artists at the beginning of this century. But it is also natural for Büttner to remain ironically aloof from art which once struggled with the problems of an authentic and unsophisticated form of artistic expression, unencumbered by civilisation and

Overall — and this was made clear by the Düsseldorf exhibition .— the expressive disposition has given way to a statuary attitude. Evidence of this is offered just as much as Stephan Balkenhol's wooden figures mounted on pedestals, as it is by Thomas Ruff's photographic work. In fact, photography was conspicuously represented at the Düsseldorf exhibition; Ruff's oversize, enlarged passport photos with the shadowless faces of young persons wear a serious expression, are, without doubt, some of the most expressive pictures in the whole show. Isolation and loneliness are just as much reflected as the exchangeability of the individuals and the technique which makes them all alike.

The time when the avantgarde's aim could be made unbroken, now seems an irrevocable thing of the past. True, no-one wants to break with the form-language and behaviourial norms of the artistic avant-garde, but the specific cognitive manner, laid claim to by the avant-garde, is no longer linked with it. The institutionalised shock is to have no extra-artistic effect whatsoever. The reflection screw has been given one more turn and now seems to have an eternal thread: the avant-garde play material is constantly re-assembled in a different way by newly-born artists. Nothing basically new takes place — fingers now gingerly present what was once charged with explosive force. We are witnessing once more a sort of selfassertion struggle by art for a separation of the artistic from the everyday, the artistic from the social, the artistic from the political. Art is presenting itself as a system of order with its own rules. In addition to the attitude of denying all claims once made

painted with a swift brush on Tapping Tunisia's geothermal waters

By Mark Newham

DEEP down beneath Tunisia's mostly parched landscape are huge pools of geothermal waters, enough, theoretically, to make the desert bloom. But geothermal irrigation poses several problems. The water that is pumped from underground aquifers is too salty and much too hot to be applied directly to plants. Moreover, digging deep wells can be costly, and cooling the water once it has reached the surface can be expen-

Now, an unusual experiment in Tunisia indicates that there may be a new and far more efficient use for the nation's geothermal riches. With a $319,000 grant from the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP), the North African nation has begun producing vegetables for export that are grown entirely under plastic. Whenever the temperature falls, the vegetables are warmed in a unique way — by geothermal heat brought to the surface through wells that have already tapped aquifers for irrigation of nearby fields.

By combining drip irrigation with geothermal heating, the project saves up to 50 per cent of water normally used in flood irrigation, and employs an otherwise protected by product otherwise wasted by-product, which is the water's heat. Drip irrigation brings water to plants in pipes or plastic tubing with tiny holes in them that permit only the water that is needed for plant growth to seep through. Flood irrigation involves pumping water through a grid of open irrigation ditches, which is more wasteful.

In the past, water for drip irngation drawn from deep wells had to be passed through a cooler before being applied to the soil, since it was too hot for immediate Water above a certai temperature harms roots and sheds large amounts of salts into

Unlike greenhouse schemes elsewhere in North Africa, which expel excess heat from aquifers into the atmosphere in cooling tanks prior to applying it for irrigation, the hot water in the Tunisian experiment is piped through plastic tubing around the greenhouses under its own pressure from the wells, and is used to heat the greenhouse at night and on chilly winter days. The water, once it has cooled during its initial circulation around the greenhouse, is safe for irrigation. Although the experiment is only two years old, initial results are so encouraging that the project's director, Herman Verlodt, believes Tunisia now has a formidable weapon for use in the battle with its North African neighbours trying to corner the same markets.

Mr. Verlodt, a Belgian agricultural advisor attached to Tunisia's Ministry of Agriculture, is concentrating on growing tomatoes, melons, peppers, cucum-bers and aubergines. He says that in all cases the added heating has increased productivity substantially. In the case of tomatoes, for example, the water-heated greenhouses now produce up to eight kilogrammes of fruit per square metre in one growing cycle twice the amount from plants in non-heated greenhouses. Improvements in productivity are similar for the other crops. While some skeptics predict a payback in decades, Mr. Verlodt is confident that the 6-8 Tunisian

This does not include the drilling of a well to tap the hot water, since it is assumed that greenhouse clusters will only be situated near existing wells already supplying irrigation and drinking water. To drill a well specially for a greenhouse project would dou-

By 1991, with funds from UNDP, Belgium and the Tunisian government, Mr. Verlodt aims to have 150 hectares of greenhouses, many privately managed by small-scale farmers.

'Foreign investments boost U.S.'

NEW YORK (Agencies) — Foreign investment in the United States helps the economy, creates jobs and increases U.S. productive capacity, a majority of corporate leaders said in a survey.

sponding said the current acceleration in foreign investment foundations. Despite this risk, a large majority of the executives oppose broad protectionist legislation and do not think such legislation will be enacted.

The nationwide survey, taken last fall and released by the accounting and management consulting firm Touche Ross and Co., elicited responses from 519 executives, 30 per cent of whom are chief executives.

Touche Ross cited government statistics that said foreign investment in the United States has surpassed $1.5 trillion.

That figure includes $1.3 trillion in portfolio investments such as government securities, bank deposits and corporate stock, and $262 billion in direct investment in manufacturing plants, banks and real estate.

Foreign direct investment alone has more than tripled since 1980, the firm said.

The executives were asked to describe the effect of foreign investment on the U.S. economy and were given three options.

Touche Ross called that a "cu-rious dichotomy" but said it was consistently reflected in results in each region of the country.

Business leaders tend to support foreign investment more than the general public does, according to a recent survey by the Japan Society, a U.S.-Japanese organisation that surveyed attitudes toward Japanese investment of people in the states of California, Tennessee and

Among some other key find-ings in the Touche Ross survey of corporate leaders' attitudes are:

- Eighty-two per cent of the respondents do not want broad protectionist legislation and 82 per cent do not think such legislation will become law. - Political stability was cited

most frequently as the main reason for the accelerating rate of foreign investment, while favourable exchange rates were cited

- Eighty-six per cent of those responding agree that foreign direct investment has created jobs for U.S. citizens and one-rates of unemployment during the past five years.

More than two-thirds said foreign direct investment has increased the nation's productive capacity during the past five years. More than 80 per cent said foreign ownership has either no effect on or improves relations with the labour force.

- Respondents ranked the auto industry as both the industry most helped and the industry most hurt by foreign investment.

Greenspan sees no recession soon, calls for deep deficit cut

On the official level, Federal Reserve (Fed) Chairman Alan Greenspan said his tough stance against inflation had improved the outlook for the economy but warned of problems ahead unless the federal budget deficit was cut sharply.

Greenspan, testifying to the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, ruled out a recession because of the rise in short-term interest rates over the past 10

"There is nothing embodied in the current balances within the economy which in any way in my judgment, at least, predisposes us to a recession," he said.

Indeed, by suppressing some of the forces that could destabilise the economy, such as inventory accumulation and inflation, the Fed had given the expansion,

Alan Greenspan

now in its seventh year, a shot in the arm. The rise in interest rates was probably more likely to extend out the recovery than to bring it to an early halt."

Greenspan, as he did earlier before another congressional panel, said he had raised interest rates because inflation was already too high and could accelerate further if the economy continued to grow at a rapid rate.

The risk of greater inflation could be appreciable if real gross national product continued to increase at recent rates over the next several years," the Fed chairman said.

Fenech to defend title against Villasana

SYDNEY (AP) — World Boxing Council (WBC) featherweight boxing champion Jeff Fenech of Australia will defend his title against Mexican Marcos Villasana at the National Tennis Centre in Melbourne April 1, promoter Bill Mordey confirmed Friday. Fenech, who has an 18-0 record, was in dispute with Mordey and the fight was in doubt. Villasana has failed in three previous attempts to win a world title but is ranked the No. 4 contender for Fenech's title by the WBC. Fenech, former holder of the IBF bantamweight and WBC super-bantamweight titles, had been at the centre of dispute between Mordey and his management team, the International Management Group (IMG). Francis's crusade to transform Queen's Park Rangers into English soccer's team of the 1990s begins in earnest Saturday with the visit of Millwall.

The former England striker and new Rangers manager spent almost £1 million ($1.75 million) in 24 hours this week to bring Liverpool's Nigel Spackman and Aston Villa's Andy Gray to the west Londoners' Loftus Road

The two signings are Francis's opening moves in his bid to turn Rangers, currently fifth from bottom of the First Division, into one of England's top teams. "I shall not be happy until I get a team that can challenge for the title," Francis said after securing the signature of Gray for £425,000 ($745,000) Thursday.

"I hope that will be by the beginning of next season. I've bought two quality players and if there are others that become available I shall endeavour to bring them in.'

Gray will launch his midfield partnership with Spackman, who cost Francis a club record £500,000 ($875,000) Wednesday, against Millwall with his new manager singing his praises.

NEW YORK (AP) — Princess Diana, who has enchanted New York's social elite and workingclass residents, is to visit Harlem hospital and meet children with AIDS Friday, her third and last day of her first official visit here... On Thursday night, she swept down a sparkling marble staircase - like Cinderella at the prince's ball — to join the guests at a gala post opera dinner in her honour. The princess, dazzling in a white evening gown with beaded bolero, paused on the steps for a moment as a four-year-old girl and her brother, seven, the children of the co-chairwoman of the event, presented her with a small bouquet of flowers. As Diana approached her seat at the head table in the atrium - known as the winter garden — of the world financial centre, the approximately 800 guests, who had watched her descend in awed silence, broke into applause. "I was thinking how poised she was," said Richard Fisher, the president of Morgan Stanley Group Incorporated. "I was surprised. You think of her as young and she was so regal." The elegant sit-down dinner in the atrium Thursday night was the princess's last event in a busy day that took her from a family's apartment at a lower east side homeless shelter to FAO Schwarz's treasure trove of tovs to the Brooklyn Academy of Music for the American debut of the Welsh National Opera.

Laurel meets Marcos

HONOLULU (AP) - Philippine Vice-President Salvador Laurel met with ousted leader Ferdinand Marcos Thursday, and Marcos son relayed a message to the Philippine government pleading for his critically ill father's return. Laurel came to Hawaii without Philippine President Corazon Aquino's blessing, with whom he has been at odds since taking office in 1986. Aquino has vowed that Marcos, who has been indicted on U.S. racketeering charges, would never return. Laurel met with Marcos' doctors, his wife, Imelda, and Marcos himself, but refused to disclose the details of any of the conversations. An aide said Laurel would make a statement before leaving Hawaii Friday morning. "I don't think he's going to take any plane rides. I just want to hear what he has to say," Laurel said before a 20-minute visit to the hospital. Marcos was listed in critical but stable condition after Laurel's visit.

Later Thursday, Marcos' son. Ferdinand Junior or "Bong Bong," released a copy of a letter he said was relayed to Mrs. Aquino Wednesday night. The letter asked that his father be allowed to return to his home-

N. Ireland government LONDON (AP) — Leaders on both sides of the conflict in Northern Ireland have held secret talks on the future government of the British-ruled province, British media reported. Northern Ireland has been ruled directly from London since the Northern Ireland assembly was dissolved amid growing strife in 1972, three years after an outbreak of religious and political violence.

Gordon Mawhinney, deputy leader of the province's middleof-the-road Alliance Party, which is supported by Roman Catholics and Protestants, confirmed he was one of those who had taken part in the talks reported by the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC). But three other politicians -James Molyneaux, leader of the Protestant official Unionist Party; the Reverend Ian Paisley, leader ionist Party; and John Hume, leader of the moderate Catholic Democratic and Labour Party distanced themselves from the reports.

Tower vote delayed

WASHINGTON (R) - The Senate Armed Services Committee Thursday postponed a vote on John Tower's nomination as defence secretary after new allegations about the former senator's behaviour surfaced. Committee Chairman Sam Nunn, a Georgia Democrat, interrupted a committee hearing on nuclear weapons to announce that the panel would not vote on Tower today as expected. "We are looking at additional bits of information." Senator John Warner, the ranking Republican on the committee, told the other members. "We will be meeting with the FBI later today," Warner told the committee. Nunn and Warner declined to state publicly what the new allegations concerned or who was making them. Tower, a former Texas senator, has denied at his nomination hearings that he is a problem drinker.

OSLO (R) - Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and former U.S. President Ronald Reagan have been nominated a second time for the Nobel Peace Prize, sources at the Nobel Institute said Friday. The sources told Reuters the Dalai Lama, the exiled spiritual leader of Tibet, Czechoslovak human rights activist and former Foreign Minister Jiri Hajek and Joao Havelange, Brazilian head of the International Football Federation, have also been nominated for the 1989 award. Last year, Nobel watchers said an award to Reagan and Gorbachev, nominated after signing the first superpower treaty to cut nuclear arsenals, could be seen as an endorsement of Republican presidential candidate George Bush.

Burma plane crash kills 26

RANGOON, Burma (AP) - A domestic airliner taking off from Rangoon airport Friday crashed after hitting a tree, killing 26 people and injuring three others on board, the state radio said. Four other people also were injured when the Burma Airways Fokker Friendship 27 crashed near housing for families of air force personnel, Radio Rangoon said. The radio said engine failure caused the crash, Burma's fourth since mid-1987, but said authorities were investigating. The Turboprop failed to gain enough altitude and hit a 3-metre tree shortly after take-off for Kengtung, 611 kilometres northeast of Rangoon, the radio reported.

Chernobyl threat lingers

MOSCOW (R) - Soviet authorities have ordered the evacuation of 20 more villages in the Republic of Byelorussia because of continuing high levels of fallout from the 1986 Chernobyl nuclear accident. Soviet television reported Thursday that persistently high levels of cesium 137 were recorded in 17 districts of Byelorussia — up to 250 kilometres north of the site of the accident in the neighbouring Republic of the Ukraine. It described the aftermath of the accident as an "unhealed wound" and said, without elaborating, that residents had not been fully informed on the consequences of the April, 1986, accident. The explosion and fire at the Chernobyl power plant was the world's worst nuclear accident, killing 31 people and forcing the evacuation of at least 100,000 people. Thursday's television report said contamination from the accident had affected 415 settlements of varying size with a total population of 103,000:
